

Medical and Surgical Supplies

DME.SU.106.A

v1.0.2026

Introduction

Medical and surgical supplies are addressed by this guideline.

Criteria

Medical and surgical supplies are considered medically necessary when there is documentation of any of the following:

- The supplies serve a therapeutic or protective function (e.g., wound healing or infection prevention) or
- The supplies are integral to the function or maintenance of a covered durable medical equipment (DME) item.

Surgical dressings are considered medically necessary when any of the following conditions are met:

- to treat pressure injuries, infections, thermal injuries, or other physical trauma
- when required after debridement of a wound, regardless of the debridement technique

Compression Bandages and Wraps

Compression bandages and multi-layer systems are considered medically necessary when they are used as a primary or secondary dressing over a wound or wounds that were surgically created, modified, or debrided.

A gradient compression wrap is considered medically necessary when it is used as a primary or secondary dressing over wounds that were surgically created, modified, or debrided.

Contact Layer Dressing

Contact layer dressings are considered medically necessary to cover the entire wound surface to prevent adherence of the secondary dressing to the wound bed.

- They are considered not medically necessary when used in conjunction with dressings that include a non-adherent or semi-adherent layer.

Wounds with Minimal Exudate

Transparent film dressings are considered medically necessary when used on open partial thickness wounds with minimal exudate, or closed wounds.

Hydrocolloid dressings are considered medically necessary for use on wounds with minimal to moderate exudate.

Hydrogel dressings are considered medically necessary for full-thickness wounds (e.g., stage 3 or 4 ulcers) with minimal or no exudate.

- They are not considered medically necessary for stage 2 ulcers.
- The concurrent use of more than one type of hydrogel dressing (e.g., filler, cover, or impregnated gauze) on the same wound at the same time is considered not medically necessary.

Collagen-based dressings or wound fillers are considered medically necessary for full-thickness wounds (e.g., stage 3 or 4 ulcers), wounds with minimal to moderate exudate, or wounds that have stalled or failed to progress toward established healing goals.

- These dressings are not considered medically necessary for wounds with heavy exudate, third-degree burns, or in the presence of active vasculitis.

Wounds with Moderate to Heavy Exudate

Alginate or other fiber-gelling dressings are considered medically necessary for full-thickness wounds (e.g., stage 3 or 4 ulcers) that exhibit moderate to heavy exudate.

Composite dressings are considered medically necessary for moderately to highly exudative wounds.

Foam dressings are considered medically necessary when used on full thickness wounds (e.g., stage 3 or 4 ulcers) with moderate to heavy exudate.

Specialty absorptive dressings are considered medically necessary when used for moderately or highly exudative full thickness wounds (e.g., stage 3 or 4 ulcers).

Zinc Paste Impregnated Bandage

A zinc paste impregnated bandage is considered medically necessary for the treatment of venous leg ulcers.

Not Covered

The following items are not covered as they are considered not medically necessary, not primarily medical in nature, and/or convenience items:

- items for general comfort or convenience (e.g., non-medical gloves, personal hygiene products)

- over-the-counter items unless specifically indicated for a covered condition
- non-elastic binder for extremity (HCPCS A4465)
- adhesive bandage, first-aid type, any size, each (HCPCS A6413)
- surgical dressing materials with any of the following:
 - balsam of Peru in castor oil
 - iodine – other than iodoform gauze packing
 - carbon fiber
 - charcoal
 - copper
 - honey
 - silver

Evidence Discussion

Wound dressings are intended to create an optimal healing environment, with material composition and design directly influencing clinical performance and individual outcomes.¹ The most commonly used modern dressings include hydrogels, gelling fibers, hydrocolloids, alginate, foams, and films.² Wound dressings that maintain a moist environment have demonstrated superior outcomes compared to those that promote dryness, both in alleviating pain and enhancing the healing process.³

A 2023 study by Zhang et al. reviewed 25 randomized controlled trials (RCTs) and found that modern moist dressings, such as hydrocolloid, foam, hydrogel, biological, and polymeric membrane dressings, offer clear advantages over traditional sterile gauze when treating pressure injuries. Specifically, hydrocolloid dressings showed significantly higher healing rates compared to gauze, while foam and hydrocolloid dressings were associated with faster wound closure and fewer dressing changes.⁴

A Cochrane review by Shi et al. (2021) analyzed 14 RCTs (n=1391) with venous leg ulcers. Compression therapy (using either bandages or stockings) was associated with faster ulcer healing and higher rates of complete healing at 12#months compared to no compression. Additionally, compression likely reduces pain and may enhance disease-specific quality of life over 12#weeks to 12#months. However, evidence regarding adverse events and cost-effectiveness was uncertain, and most included trials had moderate to high risk of bias.⁵

A 2024 review by Edger-Lacoursière et al. underscored that compression therapy is a cornerstone of conservative scar management following burn injury, particularly for hypertrophic scars. Compression garments, wraps, and related devices reduce edema and scar thickness by increasing interstitial pressure, facilitating lymphatic and venous return, and applying mechanical off-loading to minimize tension forces on healing tissue. Evidence suggested that early initiation, typically 48–72 hours post-injury for edema control and immediately after wound closure for scar management, can improve outcomes.⁶
